

Lebanon's Hizbollah Turns Eastward to Syria

Middle East Report N°153 | 27 May 2014

Table of Contents

Executive Summary.....	i
I. Introduction	1
II. Hizbollah’s Perspective	3
A. Hizbollah’s Narrative	3
B. Deeper and Deeper	5
C. Assessing Gains and Losses	7
D. Views among the Shiite Community	10
III. Challenges Ahead	13
A. Endangered Strategic and Social Depth	13
B. Hizbollah’s Metamorphosis: Whither the Resistance?	18
C. Hubris?.....	19
IV. Conclusion	22
APPENDICES
A. Map of Lebanon’s Border with Syria.....	23
B. About the International Crisis Group	24
C. Crisis Group Reports and Briefings on the Middle East and North Africa since 2011	25
D. Crisis Group Board of Trustees	27

Executive Summary

The Lebanese Shiite armed movement Hizbollah has gone all-in for Syrian President Bashar Assad. It has shown it will back his regime by any means necessary, despite doubts about its capacity to win a decisive victory and regardless of the risks to the movement's own moral standing and cross-sectarian appeal. As it is drawn ever-deeper into its neighbour's civil war that seems poised to endure for years, it finds itself increasingly distracted from its original anti-Israel focus and risking a profound reshaping of its identity.

Hizbollah's original military objectives in Syria were clear: to save a regime it sees as a vital ally and distance Sunni jihadis from its borders and neighbourhoods. Its contributions have been crucial. Its forces reversed the regime's flagging momentum and enabled it to gain the relative advantage it enjoys today. Its fight against the Syrian opposition, which it has cast in harsh sectarian terms, has shored up its support base. But the long-term costs – for both Hizbollah and the region – of involvement in a sectarian, zero-sum war could be as steep as the short-term benefits are significant.

The movement welcomed the initial "Arab Spring" uprisings directed at its foes. But it drew a line at Syria, and as Bashar Assad's grip slipped, it came to see its own survival as a function of his. His fall would have deprived it of a vital ally and an important supply route for weapons from Iran; moreover, with the Syrian uprising having morphed into a regional proxy war, Assad's fall would have recalibrated the regional balance of power to Hizbollah's detriment. As al-Qaeda offshoots or affiliates emerged within rebel ranks, the Shiite movement, like its constituency, came to see the civil war as existential.

Allegations of Hizbollah's military involvement in Syria surfaced in mid-2012, after armed opposition groups made notable gains in the south and east; surrounded Damascus, thus potentially endangering the regime; and took control of key border zones that connected the rebels with Sunni enclaves on the Lebanese side. After months of rumoured support, Hizbollah in May 2013 publicly took the lead in evicting rebels from the border town of Qusayr. Its fall in June boosted the regime and encouraged the Shiite group to extend its fight to the Qalamoun Mountains and beyond.

Its full-fledged military intervention steered Hizbollah into unchartered territory. From its perspective, it had little choice; subsequent events have confirmed to the movement that it took the right turn. Its military campaign has been successful, bolstering Assad's position, and though dozens of Shiites in Lebanon have been killed in a wave of unprecedented al-Qaeda-inspired suicide bomb attacks since Qusayr, the movement is convinced that more would have died had it not distanced the Syrian rebels from Lebanon's borders. These retaliatory attacks also benefited the movement by cementing its base, through seeming confirmation that Syrian rebels are Sunni extremists who all along have had Lebanon's Shiites in their crosshairs.

In the longer term however, Hizbollah's involvement in Syria threatens the movement and is problematic for Lebanon and the Arab world more broadly. It has deepened the regional sectarian divide, fuelled the very extremism it purports to combat and eroded the movement's legitimacy among constituencies that previously were supportive. By framing its fight as a preemptive attack on takfiris – those who declare other Muslims to be apostates – Hizbollah has tarred all shades of the opposition, and indeed sometimes all Sunnis, with the same radicalising brush. It has exaggerated, and thereby exacerbated, the sectarianism of the Syrian opposition as well as its own domestic opponents. Once widely respected across the political and confessional spectrum, Hizbollah (literally “The Party of God”) now often is referred to as “The Party of Satan”. The warm popular embrace that for the movement was tantamount to strategic depth has diminished, along with its reputation for moral probity. Ironically, shoring up its eastern front has made Hizbollah more vulnerable.

These developments bode poorly for Lebanon, the well-being of which is dependent on the relations between its political blocs and confessional groups. The sectarian clashes the country experienced in 2013 and early 2014 have been brought under control by what is known as “the security plan”, but the respite is likely temporary. With Lebanon’s Sunnis frustrated, Shiites eager not to lose the gains of the past decades and smaller confessional groups caught in the middle, the year’s escalation is only a foretaste of what could ensue if the security agreement breaks down. In a country that has long lamented its political paralysis, many are hoping for just such a standstill – as a best-case scenario.

Some among Hizbollah’s regional and wider international critics, allied with its rivals, might see a silver lining in these developments: Hizbollah is mired in what seems to be an endless war in Syria, fighting a determined and radical enemy, and is distracted from its traditional focus on Israel. But the same vortex is pulling in both Hizbollah and its enemies, with no prospect of escape for either. Nor will the critics relish the spread of the Shiite jihadism that the Syrian war is nurturing.

What is necessary for the sake of not only Lebanon but also the entire region – reducing sectarian rhetoric, withdrawing and expelling all foreign fighters from Syria – is highly unlikely to occur. Hizbollah believes in its current strategy, and its enemies are determined to fight what they perceive as a Shiite occupation force. So long as the Syrian conflict remains a black hole, the Shiite armed group will be caught in its gravity, itself transformed no less than its involvement transforms the conflict as a whole.

Beirut/Brussels, 27 May 2014

Lebanon's Hizbollah Turns Eastward to Syria

I. Introduction

Hizbollah's full-fledged military intervention in Syria surprised many observers across the political spectrum.¹ As late as May 2012, a senior Hizbollah official asserted: "We did not, and we will not fight in Syria".² Prior to its overt involvement in the battle for Qusayr in 2013, the Shiite movement had regularly criticised Sunni Lebanese groups for fighting on behalf of the Syrian opposition and denounced the flow of arms and fighters across the border as a threat to Lebanon's stability.³

As military pressure on President Bashar Assad's regime intensified in the course of 2012, Hizbollah's role evolved. What began as political support for a government that had been a crucial ally in the group's occasional confrontations with Israel increasingly took the form of military assistance.⁴ By mid-2012, claims had surfaced (albeit mainly from the group's opponents) that Hizbollah was providing technical and logistical support to Damascus and that it was helping some of Syria's Shiite communities develop self-defence militias.⁵ As reports of Hizbollah casualties mounted,⁶ Hassan Nasrallah, the movement's secretary general, acknowledged in October 2012 that it was playing a role in Syria. He insisted, however, that this was restricted to helping Lebanese Shiites, living on the Syrian side of the border, protect their villages and families against rebels and denied broader involvement: "Until this moment, we have not fought in Syria and [Assad's] regime has not asked us to do so".⁷

¹ This was true of Lebanon's two rival political camps: the Saudi and Western-backed March 14 alliance, led by the Future Current, and the Hizbollah-led March 8 alliance. Crisis Group interviews, Beirut, October-November 2013. A senior U.S. diplomat said, "I admit that neither we nor our intelligence services imagined that Hizbollah would send thousands of fighters into Syria". Crisis Group interview, Washington, November 2013.

² al-Nashra, 27 May 2012.

³ "Nasrallah accuses March 14 of arming Syrian opposition", The Daily Star, 16 February 2012. See also Crisis Group Middle East Report N°132, A Precarious Balancing Act: Lebanon and the Syrian Conflict, 22 November 2012, pp. 13-16.

⁴ In May 2011, Hassan Nasrallah, Hizbollah's secretary general, said, "the fall of the Syrian regime is an Israeli-U.S. interest, aiming at getting Syria to sign any peace deal with Israel As a resistance movement against Israel, we are required to adopt a responsible stance that is committed to the security and stability of Syria as a government and people". Al-Manar, 25 May 2011. In March 2012, he asserted: "The most important weapons with which we fought Israel during the [2006] July war came from Syria". Al-Manar, 15 March 2012.

⁵ The U.S. accused Hizbollah of providing a "range of activity, including logistical support, operational support, to the Syrian Government in its violent crackdown". www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/ps/2012/08/196335.htm. "Iran and H[i]zbollah build militia networks in Syria in event that Assad falls, officials say", The Washington Post, 10 February 2013.

⁶ "H[i]zbollah increases support for Syrian regime, U.S. and Lebanese officials say", The Washington Post, 26 September 2012; "H[i]zbollah role in Syria grows more evident", The Daily Star, 12 October 2012; "H[i]zbollah commander, fighters killed in Syria", The Washington Post, 2 October 2012; "Are H[i]zbollah's mysterious 'martyrs' dying in Syria?", France 24, 1 October 2012.

⁷ See Nasrallah's speech on Al-Manar, 11 October 2012.

Whatever the truth of these claims and counter-claims, Hizbollah crossed a significant threshold the following year. Rumours that the group was playing a major role on the frontlines built throughout the spring; in May 2013, it publicly acknowledged for the first time dispatching fighters to Syria, as it spearheaded an assault against Syrian rebels in the border town of Qusayr. In February 2014, it sent its troops to the town of Yabroud, in the Qalamoun Mountains north of Damascus. While individual battles like Yabroud and Qusayr have received the most attention, the U.S. claims to have tracked the movement deploying fighters across the country, in particular in Deraa, Aleppo and Idlib, in addition to Damascus and its suburbs.⁸

The full extent of Hizbollah's actions in Syria is unclear and probably will remain so. What is clear is the message the Shiite party sent by taking credit for the Qusayr victory: that it will spare no effort to back its ally and defeat those it considers enemies. Joining the war paved the way for an ever more aggressive approach – and an increased risk of retaliation by its Syrian and Lebanese opponents.

⁸ Crisis Group interviews, Syrian activists, U.S. officials, Beirut, Washington, October-November 2013. A senior U.S. diplomat said, “we now have intelligence showing Hizbollah and Iraqi volunteers fighting in Deraa, Idlib, and in and around Aleppo”. Crisis Group interview, Washington, November 2013. See also, “4,000 H[i]zbollah fighters reach rebel-held Aleppo: FSA”, The Daily Star, 6 June 2013; “FSA chief: After Qusayr, H[i]zbollah fighters reach Idlib and Aleppo”, Al-Arabiya, 26 April 2013.

II. Hizbollah's Perspective

Hizbollah's forceful military involvement was a logical extension of its steadfast support, since 2005, for President Assad. From its perspective, intervention became a "strategic necessity" in July 2012, when the regime's survival seemed jeopardised; persuading Hizbollah's constituency that participation in the Syria conflict was a "necessary evil" proved relatively easy, indicating effective preparation.⁹ The movement highlighted the growing threat to Lebanese Shiites' well-being and safety from radical Sunni militants across the border and so the need to shift from moral to military support. The message that Syria's Sunni rebels were an existential threat not only to the so-called axis of resistance against Israel (Hizbollah, Iran and the Syrian regime),¹⁰ but also to Lebanese Shiites resonated with Hizbollah's supporters.

A. Hizbollah's Narrative

Hizbollah's narrative about the conflict has kept the Shiite community onside, though it also has contributed to escalating sectarianism, turning the movement's dire warnings about bloodthirsty Sunni extremists into a self-fulfilling prophecy. Hizbollah did not oppose the Arab uprisings when they began in 2011. When the protests, sparked in Tunisia, swept across Egypt, Libya and Bahrain, Hizbollah welcomed them as "liberation revolutions"¹¹. However when the unrest reached Syria in March 2011, it adopted a different stance. Nasrallah distinguished the case by underscoring Damascus's vital role in the axis of resistance – an attempt to boost the regime's dwindling legitimacy by portraying the unrest as part of a broader campaign by Israel's supporters rather than as a popular uprising.¹²

In July 2012, Nasrallah said the U.S. had "taken advantage of rightful demands of the Syrian people, prevented dialogue and turned Syria into a war zone because the objective is destroying and fragmenting Syria, like they did in Iraq".¹³ A year later, he developed this theme further:

The whole war on Bashar al-Assad is because of his backing of the resistance Syria is the backbone of the resistance ... and the resistance cannot stand if [Syria] is broken A new phase has begun to support and protect the resistance and Lebanon, and this is everyone's responsibility.¹⁴

Gradually, in Hizbollah's rhetoric, supporting Assad's regime became tantamount to preserving the movement and, by extension, the well-being of Shiites themselves. The community closed ranks; even those who, in significant numbers, previously had ⁹ Crisis Group interview, Hizbollah official, Beirut, October 2013.

¹⁰ Previously, the Palestinian movement Hamas was part of the axis of resistance, but its support for the Syrian opposition estranged it from its former allies. See below and Crisis Group Middle East Report N°149, The Next Round in Gaza, 25 March 2014, pp. 4, 9.

¹¹ See Nasrallah's speech on al-Manar, 19 March 2011. He addressed the Egyptians demonstrating against former President Hosni Mubarak: "You are waging the war of Arab dignity. Today, with your voices, blood and steadfastness, you are retrieving the dignity of the Arab people; the dignity which was humiliated by some rulers of the Arab world for decades". Press TV, 7 February 2011.

¹² Nasrallah said, "Syria was not only a passageway for the resistance, but also a real military supporter of the resistance. For example, the most important missiles that were falling on Haifa and central Israel [in 2006] were Syrian missiles, offered by Syria to the resistance". Naharnet, 18 July 2012.

¹³ Naharnet, 18 July 2012.

¹⁴ The Daily Star, 25 May 2013.

criticised the regime, began to see its downfall as an existential threat. One such former critic – a journalist who had voiced displeasure with Hezbollah – drew a comparison with the 2006 war, during which Israel bombed Shiite areas of Lebanon:

Who are the backers of the Syrian opposition? They are [the Saudi and Western-backed] March 14 alliance, the U.S., France, Saudi Arabia. They all belong to the camp that plotted against us in 2006. Even if I don't like Assad, I find no choice but to support this regime.¹⁵

Assad's foes have in turn helped Nasrallah make his case by linking the Syrian president's ouster with Hezbollah's downfall.¹⁶

The movement's strategy rallied its base, but not without cost. It jeopardised relations with important segments of Syrian society – especially the Sunni lower and middle classes – that formerly had supported Hezbollah and further antagonised other Lebanese constituencies that saw in its stance support for a brutal regime.¹⁷

The party's self-serving depiction of the opposition as dominated by Sunni extremists and Shiite-haters emanated in part from its inadequate understanding of Syria outside of regime circles. As Crisis Group wrote in November 2012, "Hezbollah officials [had] acquired neither deep knowledge of, nor close ties to Syrian society, focusing instead on security and political cooperation with the regime".¹⁸ Its relative distance made it easier for the movement to formulate a narrative rooted in its own ethos and based on its own interests, as opposed to a more nuanced account of the opposition's complex nature.

The deeper the movement's involvement in Syria, the graver and more direct the threats – many of which since have come to pass – it has invoked as justification. Hezbollah began by talking about the self-defence needs of Lebanese Shiite villagers on the Syrian side of the border;¹⁹ later, it highlighted the necessity of protecting Shiite shrines;²⁰ ultimately, it advocated a pre-emptive war against takfiris,²¹ the term it

¹⁵ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, November 2013.

¹⁶ A senior Future Current official said, "the Syrian uprising is the best thing that could happen to Lebanon. It is only a matter of time before Hezbollah is weakened and it is compelled to relinquish its arsenal". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2011. Crisis Group Report, A Precarious Balancing Act, op.cit., pp. 20-21; "Barak says Assad's departure 'major blow' to Hizbullah", Naharnet, 17 May 2013; "Iran's Achilles' Heel", The New York Times, 7 February 2012. Hezbollah officials appear convinced that the regime's backing for their movement was a prime motivation for the attempt to topple it: "Were Assad to halt its support to Hizbollah today, no one would call for regime change. The ultimate goal of the war on Syria is to break Hizbollah and Iran". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, October 2013.

¹⁷ Crisis Group interviews, Syrian activists and journalists, Beirut, Tripoli, Akkar, September-December 2011.

¹⁸ See Crisis Group Report, A Precarious Balancing Act, op. cit., p.10

¹⁹ Nasrallah said, "there are more than two dozen villages and farms located just inside Syria, north of the border with Lebanon, that are home to around 30,000 Lebanese, many of whom are Shiites and members of H[i]zbollah The residents of these towns took the decision to stay and defend themselves against [Syrian] armed groups and did not engage in battle between the regime and the opposition". Quoted in The Christian Science Monitor, 15 October 2012.

²⁰ Religious shrines have powerful symbolic significance in Shiite culture. The Damascus shrine to Sayyida Zeinab, the daughter of Ali and granddaughter of Muhammad, was a particularly popular destination for young Shiites from Lebanon and the region as a whole. Hezbollah presented the defence of shrines as prevention of further sectarian strife. In Nasrallah's words, "the destruction of the Sayyida Zeinab shrine could have led to a sectarian war in the region. We sent 40 to 50 fighters to [protect it]". "Nasrallah's December 3 interview on OTV", Now, 3 December 2013. A party official uses to denote Sunni jihadis, thus conjuring up memories of al-Qaeda's slaughter of Shiites in Iraq:

We consider that these groups gaining control over Syria or some specific Syrian provinces, especially those close to the Lebanese borders, are a great danger to Lebanon [They are] a great danger to Lebanon, the Lebanese people, the Lebanese state, and coexistence in Lebanon ... to Muslims and Christians [and] to Sunnis first [as takfiris tend to turn against their kin]. Do you want evidence? Look to Iraq.²²

The Shiite movement presented its intervention in Syria as a means of preventing the spread of jihadis into Lebanon: "If we didn't fight in Syria, we would now be fighting in Lebanon".²³ When violent attacks against Hizbollah and the Shiite community escalated,²⁴ they were seen not as the outcome of the movement joining the Syrian fray, but rather as proof of its wisdom in doing so, a taste of the far greater bloodshed Lebanon would have suffered had Hizbollah not preemptively taken the fight to its enemy. Nasrallah put it bluntly: "If we withdraw from Syria, then [the Syrian towns of] Qusayr, Qalamoun and the Lebanese border would fall in the hands of the armed groups. Car bombs will target all of Lebanon, not only Dahiyeh".²⁵

The language used by Hizbollah to describe the Syrian conflict mirrors that of its foes. While it invokes the spectacle of the bloodthirsty takfiris to justify its actions, its enemies mobilise their constituencies by painting Hizbollah as a sectarian, savage and inhumane party.²⁶ Indeed, the takfiri slur has proved to be a double-edged sword for Hizbollah, serving not only to rally its supporters but also, as part of an escalatory dynamic, to motivate its opponents and exacerbate sectarianism among the Syrian armed opposition. By 2013, such rhetoric had become the principal means through which both sides legitimised their actions, dehumanised their opponents and appealed to their bases amid a marked intensification of violence.

B. Deeper and Deeper

Hizbollah's military involvement chiefly reflects the party's changing assessment of the power balance in Syria. From the start, its top priority has been to ensure the regime's survival, which, in mid-2012, no longer appeared certain. Damascus's failure said, "by defending the Sayyida Zeinab shrine, Hizbollah helped prevent broader and more dangerous discord and killing among Sunnis and Shiites. Shrines are important in the Shiite conscience, and the impact of their destruction should not be underestimated. A striking example is the Iraqi carnage that followed the [2006] destruction of shrines in Samarra". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, October 2013.

²¹ Islamists who denounce others as infidels or impious.

²² Al-Manar, 25 May 2013.

²³ Crisis Group interview, Hizbollah official, Beirut, November 2013.

²⁴ Since May 2013, Hizbollah checkpoints and convoys and predominantly Shiite neighbourhoods have been targeted by rockets, car bombs and ambushes, killing dozens of Shiites. On 19 November 2013, a double suicide bombing struck the Iranian embassy in Beirut, killing 25, including a diplomat. "Rockets hit Beirut's Dahiyeh", and "17 indicted for launching rockets at Baabda, Dahiyeh", Now, 26 May, 28 October 2013; "Dozens killed in the wake of the Dahiyeh explosion – Lebanese Red Cross", LBCI, 15 August 2013; Al-Manar, 2 and 21 January 2013; Al-Akhbar, 2 February 2014.

²⁵ "Nasrallah's 3 December interview on OTV", op. cit. Dahiyeh ("suburb"), designates the southern fringe of Beirut, considered Hizbollah's headquarters and where it enjoys wide popular support.

²⁶ Crisis Group interviews, Syrians activists and refugees, Lebanese clerics and Salafists, Beirut, Tripoli, Saida, Arsal, Akkar, 2011-2013.

to contain the uprising – indeed, its use of tactics that fuelled it – altered Hizbollah's initial assumption that the regime quickly would regain control of the country and isolate islands of opposition.²⁷ With rebels approaching the capital, controlling swathes of the north and, for over a year, repelling sustained regime efforts to dislodge them from Homs and its surroundings, a senior Hizbollah official said:

After the July 2012 bombing [that killed four senior security officials in the heart of Damascus] and subsequent rebel assault on Damascus, the regime began to slide. It faced the very real possibility of losing the capital, which would have amounted to its fall.²⁸

Moreover, by 2013 the flow of foreign fighters into the armed opposition and the resulting increase in sectarian sentiment had become a concern.²⁹ Hardline Islamists took control of crucial areas along the Lebanese border, notably in the rebel supply hubs of Qusayr and Qalamoun. They threatened to sever Hizbollah's Hermel stronghold in north-east Lebanon from its Syrian hinterland and, equally alarmingly, to connect Syrian rebels with sympathetic forces in Lebanon's north as well as its eastern town of Arsal. Meanwhile, the strength of Sunni Islamists in Syria emboldened their Lebanese counterparts;³⁰ cross-border cooperation came to constitute a genuine long-term threat to Hizbollah.

Further complicating the movement's position was Qatari and Saudi sponsorship of the opposition. Gulf involvement raised the stakes for both Iran and Hizbollah, for whom the fall of the Syrian regime would have meant not only the loss of a strategic ally but also a disadvantageous recalibration of the regional power balance. By the end of 2013, the regional sponsors of the Syrian conflict were locked in a self-perpetuating cycle of confrontation. As an Hizbollah official put it:

As the Syrian conflict became ever more regionalised and internationalised, Hizbollah could not have stood on the sidelines. The involvement of March 14, Islamists, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Qatar, the U.S. and France posed a direct threat to us and to Iran. Not only could it have led to Assad's fall, but it also could have guaranteed that any future Syrian regime would have been under the influence of forces fundamentally hostile to the resistance axis.³¹

A journalist with close ties to the movement went further:

Were Assad's regime to have fallen, Hizbollah would have been next in line. It would have become fully exposed, defenceless vis-à-vis its Lebanese foes and their regional backers, but also vis-à-vis Israel insofar as it would have lost its main ²⁷ Crisis Group Middle East Report N° 128, Syria's Mutating Conflict, 1 August 2012. In December 2011, a senior Hizbollah official said, "the Syrian regime is still strong. Assad will consolidate its power. He will regain control of Syria even as some islands of insecurity remain in peripheral areas". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2011.

²⁸ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

²⁹ Accurate estimates of foreign fighters in Syria are difficult to obtain. The International Center for the Study of Radicalisation estimated that, to December 2013, as many as 11,000 from more than 70 countries, Arab and European in particular, had joined rebel ranks. www.icsr.info/2013/12/icsr-insight-11000-foreign-fighters-syria-steep-rise-among-western-europeans/.

³⁰ See Crisis Group Middle East Reports, A Precarious Balancing Act, op. cit.; and N° 141, Too Close for Comfort: Syrians in Lebanon, 13 May 2013.

³¹ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, November 2013.

weapons supply line. And, across the border, it would have faced hostile forces awaiting the right moment to pounce.³²

C. Assessing Gains and Losses

Militarily, Hizbollah's offensives in the Damascus suburbs³³, Qusayr in June 2013 and the Qalamoun Mountains in March 2014 were successful. These campaigns, particularly in Qusayr, also paid symbolic and psychological dividends, in spite of the significant human losses.³⁴ Though Hizbollah may have exaggerated Qusayr's strategic value,³⁵ the victory handed the regime a much-needed achievement. A senior Hizbollah official claimed, with some justification: "Our entry into Qusayr led to an important boost in morale among regime forces".³⁶

At home, victory was followed by street celebrations.³⁷ The successful offensive burnished the movement's image and credentials, mitigating scepticism among its base about the wisdom of Hizbollah's choices and Assad's staying power. For most Shiites, Qusayr demonstrated that they were not only winning battles but were also on the right strategic track. A Hizbollah supporter said, "when the Syrian regime appeared weak, I had doubts. But, once again, Hassan Nasrallah didn't mislead us. Everything he said proved correct. The victory he promised, just like last time [in the 2006 war against Israel], became a reality".³⁸ The movement's leadership cultivated a triumphalist spirit that its members, as well as sympathetic journalists and analysts, projected in the media.³⁹

³² Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

³³ According to Syrian militants and activists, Hizbollah has dispatched fighters to the Sayyida Zeinab shrine south of the capital since mid-2012. In 2013-2014, it helped the regime recapture several Damascus suburbs. In December 2013, Nasrallah acknowledged Hizbollah's presence in the capital. "Nasrallah's December 3 interview on OTV", op. cit.; Crisis Group interviews, Syrian militants and activists, Beirut, 2013; "H[i]zbollah, Iraqi militia capture Damascus suburb: opposition", Reuters, 9 October 2013; "Syrian army recaptures two Damascus suburbs from rebels", The Independent, 11 October 2013; "Hizbollah in Syria", Institute for the Study of War, Middle East Security Report no. 19, April 2014, pp. 18-21; "Syria army, Hizb[o]llah advance in key Damascus town amid deal for retreat of rebels from C. Homs", Naharnet, 4 May 2014.

³⁴ Authoritative estimates of Hizbollah's casualties in Syria are impossible to obtain because of its secrecy policy. The UK-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights asserted it lost 232 fighters in Qusayr. The Christian Science Monitor, 3 December 2013.

³⁵ The opposition, in an attempt to raise resources, arguably did so as well. Both the protagonists and media freely used terms such as "game-changer", "mother of all battles", "balance of power changer", "a key front" and "a turning point", exaggerating the strategic significance of a small, peripheral town; eg, Al-Monitor, 22 April 2013; www.dohainstitute.org/release/23f50d5e-ec95-48d6-8cca-90d73030af6f; www.bbc.co.uk/arabic/middleeast/2013/05/130524_qusair_syria.shtml; al-Sharq al-Awsat, 24 April 2013; "U.S. and Israel lobby reel from H[i]zbollah al-Qusayr victory", Foreign Policy Journal, 8 June 2013.

³⁶ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

³⁷ See "Dahiyeh celebrates 'al-Qusayr fall'", Now, 5 June 2013.

³⁸ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013. In May 2013, Nasrallah told movement supporters and fighters, "I have always promised you victory, and now I renew my promise of victory again This battle [in Syria] is ours ... and I promise you victory", Al-Manar, 25 May 2013.

³⁹ Crisis Group observations, media outlets, social media pages, September 2013-February 2014. After meeting with him in October 2013, a Lebanese journalist close to the movement said, "President Assad is very comfortable; his troops have registered major advances. The whole word is adopting his initial view that the war in Syria is a war against terrorists". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, October 2013. Hizbollah-affiliated media emphasised the movement's gains while downplaying its op-

Even as Hizbollah celebrated Qusayr, it continued to play down allegations that its forces were active in Aleppo and elsewhere in Syria. In December 2013, Hassan Nasrallah said, "Syrians are fighting in Syria; we are not fighting on their behalf. We have no fighters in Deraa, Sweida, Raqqa or Hasaka. We are only present in Damascus, Homs, and areas near the border In Qalamoun, the Syrian army is fighting. Hizbollah's participation is minimal".⁴⁰ According to party officials, the movement's aim was to improve the regime's position, so that it could secure a favourable negotiated outcome;⁴¹ it did not intend, they said, to fight on its behalf indefinitely.

Yet, the Qusayr success tempted Hizbollah to push further, fighting fierce battles to control the entire Syrian-Lebanese border. It played a vital role in a February-March 2014 regime offensive in the Qalamoun area and led the campaign to capture Yabroud, allegedly the transit hub for car-bombs smuggled into Lebanon.⁴²

If today the movement shows no intention of restraining itself in Syria, it is in no small part because the consequences of its intervention, for the time being at least, seem limited. Domestic reactions have been mild, a reflection of the resoluteness of its base and the weakness of its foes, notably the March 14 coalition. Sunni Islamists across the region have been infuriated, but this has not produced a coherent, coordinated response.⁴³ Thus far, opponents' most significant response has been an unprecedented series of spectacular explosions targeting Shiite neighbourhoods, the Iranian embassy and cultural centre in Beirut and other party assets. Though shocking, these appear uncoordinated and have affected neither Hizbollah's approach in Syria nor its perception of the risks. On the contrary, they have confirmed to the movement the soundness of its choice; if it had not intervened, party members argue, Lebanon's Shiites would have suffered even worse outrages, because their enemy would have felt triumphant and empowered. A senior Hizbollah official said:

True, our support for the regime has carried some negative consequences. But the price of not intervening would have been comparatively far higher. We could have been surrounded by our enemies, and our physical link to Iran [via Syria] could have been severed. What price have we paid? A few car bombs? Imagine, had we not intervened, how many dozens of bombs we would have faced, together with opposition fighters in [the Lebanese town of] Aarsal rather than in the [Syrian towns of] Qalamoun.⁴⁴

The growth of extremist Sunni groups, such as al-Qaeda affiliate Jabhat al-Nusra and its offshoot, the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL),⁴⁵ helped Hizbollah's argument. It not only made confrontation with the Syrian opposition seem inevitable, but also boosted the appeal of the regime. A senior Hizbollah official said:

ponents'. See, eg, "Syria's Yabroud on way to victory: Al-Manar Exclusive", Al-Manar, 15 March 2014; "Kasab Crossing ... Illusion of Victory, Liberation", Al-Manar, 27 March 2014;

⁴⁰ "Nasrallah's December 3 interview on OTV", op. cit.

⁴¹ Crisis Group interviews, November 2013 and senior official, December 2013, both Beirut.

⁴² Al-Hayat, 18 February 2014; "Syria shows off car-bomb assembly site", The Daily Star, 18 March 2014.

⁴³ In response to Hizbollah's involvement in Syria, Lebanese Salafi sheikhs called young Sunnis to join in jihad with the rebels. "Sunni youth sign up for holy war against H[i]zbollah", Al-Arabiya, 24 April 2013.

⁴⁴ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

⁴⁵ In February 2014, al-Qaeda disavowed and cut ties with ISIL. BBC, 3 February 2014.

The opposition – and notably Jabhat al-Nusra and Daash [the Arabic acronym for ISIL] – has provided a gift to the regime. It helped push people back toward the regime as a result of their behaviour. For example, the Shammar tribe [in the north east] moved away from the opposition and began asking the regime for weapons to fight al-Nusra and Daash. The same goes for the Kurds.⁴⁶

While the Shiite movement's involvement in Syria has itself fuelled the rise of these Islamist groups,⁴⁷ the jihadi threat nevertheless discredited the Syrian opposition and its cause; the anti-Assad insurgency lost its lustre as a popular uprising.⁴⁸ This is particularly true in the West, but also among many Lebanese Christians, whose leaders like Hizbollah ally Michel Aoun consistently present Syrian Sunni extremists as an existential threat to their community.⁴⁹

Nor has Hizbollah suffered any meaningful diplomatic penalty. Gulf and European states reacted negatively, but mildly, to its intervention. Only a single member state, Bahrain, followed through on the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) threat to list the movement as a terrorist organisation, while the EU put only the military branch on its list – measures that, even if applied in full, would have had minimal impact, given Hizbollah's limited assets and interests in both regions.⁵⁰ Far from hurting the Shiite party, the GCC's reaction only highlighted its own disunity. Indeed Qatar – a principal backer of the Syrian opposition – partially restored relations with Hizbollah after helping mediate a deal for the release of nine Shiite pilgrims captured by Syrian groups.⁵¹

The regional situation grew more favourable to Hizbollah in the second half of 2013. Its initial enthusiasm for revolutionary change in the Arab world had long given way to a reactionary outlook, in accordance with which it sought a return to the status quo ante. It welcomed the July 2013 ouster of Egyptian President Mohamed

⁴⁶ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

⁴⁷ A journalist said, "the more Hizbollah invokes Sunni extremists, the more it ignites Sunni anger, fuelling this same extremism". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013. "Hizbollah's Syrian involvement deepens regional sectarian divide", Financial Times, 24 May 2013; "Feltman dubs Hizb[o]llah 'soldiers of fortune,' accuses it of causing sectarian tensions", Naharnet, 25 October 2013.

⁴⁸ Even a staunch Syrian opposition member said, "I feel sad for what has become of the uprising. Jihadi groups have stolen our dream. Sometimes, I wonder if we shouldn't just accept seeing this regime remain to end this ugly war". Crisis Group interview, Washington, January 2013.

⁴⁹ Concern about jihadi groups is particularly acute in the West, as hundreds of European and, to a lesser extent, U.S. citizens have joined the fight. "Al-Qaeda training British and European 'jihadists' in Syria to set up terror cells at home", The Telegraph, 19 January 2014; "Jihadists returning home to Europe from Syria pose new terror threat", The Wall Street Journal, 4 December 2013; "Al-Qaida faction in Syria contemplating US attack, intelligence officials warn", The Guardian, 29 January 2014. Michel Aoun (leader of the Free Patriotic Movement), spoke of abduction of nuns by Syrian rebels: "There is a threat (to) our future, our existence, all which we believe in and what the East and Lebanon [in particular] were built upon. We have always [warned] that the threat of extremist takfiri thinking is ... real". "Aoun: Nuns' abduction proves threat of takfiris", Now, 3 December 2013.

⁵⁰ "Gulf states agree to blacklist H[i]zbollah as terrorist group", Al-Arabiya, 17 July 2013. "GCC rules out possibility that Gulf will blacklist Hizb[o]llah as terrorist group", Naharnet, 10 September 2013. "Bahrain first Arab country to blacklist H[i]zbollah as terrorist organisation", Al-Arabiya, 9 April 2013. The EU did not act against Hizbollah's political party. "EU resists H[i]zbollah ban but lists armed wing as terrorist group", The Guardian, 22 July 2013. Public perception of EU disapproval evaporated when its representative in Lebanon met with a Hizbollah official responsible for international relations. The Daily Star, 26 July 2013.

⁵¹ The Daily Star, 17 December 2013.

Morsi, which removed a regime sympathetic to the Syrian opposition,⁵² and took heart from the September chemical weapons agreement, which a senior Hizbollah official took as a sign of potential rapprochement between Assad and the West: “The regime showed that it could be a reliable partner, unlike the opposition. Who on the opposition side could guarantee anything? That is why the U.S. realised that a political solution is in its best interest”.⁵³

D. Views among the Shiite Community

Hizbollah's standing among Shiites in Lebanon remains strong, despite criticism, including within its own community.⁵⁴ Detractors blame the movement for endangering Lebanon's shaky peace for the sake of its own regional interests and particularly to prop up the Syrian regime.⁵⁵ Indeed, Hizbollah's strategy seems to have rendered vulnerable the Shiite community it claims to protect. The country's recent al-Qaeda-inspired suicide bombings are unprecedented. Though there have been several surges of sectarian tension in past years, these started only after Hizbollah intervened in Syria and announced it was fighting takfiris. Since April 2014, the attacks have subsided, following an agreement within the Lebanese political class that enabled the country's military and security forces to arrest dozens of alleged extremists and deploy in tense areas like Tripoli and Aarsal. However, these security measures do not end the threat. As a Tripoli sheikh put it, “many Islamists went underground waiting for a change of circumstance – the collapse of the political agreement, or an important military achievement by rebels in Syria”.⁵⁶

⁵² A senior official said: “Since [army chief and Defence Minister] al-Sisi took over, those who support him voice support for the Syrian regime”. Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013. For background on Egyptian events, see Crisis Group Middle East/North Africa Briefing N°35, Marching in Circles: Egypt's Dangerous Second Transition, 7 August 2013.

⁵³ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013. A journalist with close ties to the party said, “the past few years show that a Western shift toward Syria is not impossible”. Crisis Group interview, Beirut, October 2013. The West and its allies have done about-turns on Syria before. After seeking pressure on Damascus for years, France and Saudi Arabia began to normalise relations with the regime in 2008, essentially recognising they could not achieve their goals in the region without its cooperation. The U.S. also eased its pressure. Crisis Group Middle East Briefing N°27, Engaging Syria? Lessons from the French Experience, 15 January 2009; and Reports N°83, Engaging Syria? U.S. Constraints and Opportunities, 11 February 2009; N°92, Reshuffling the Cards? (I): Syria's Evolving Strategy, 14 December 2009; and N°93, Reshuffling the Cards? (II): Syria's New Hand, 16 December 2009.

⁵⁴ A Dahiyeh resident said, “Hizbollah's fight in Syria is wrong and unjustified. Its actions are making us pay a heavy price for nothing”. A Shiite cleric opposed to Hizbollah said, “I regularly receive Shiites who complain about Hizbollah's role in Syria. They are just afraid to express their discontent in public”. A resident of a southern village said, “Hizbollah is committing a historic mistake”. Crisis Group interviews, Beirut, South Lebanon, October-December 2013.

⁵⁵ Crisis Group interviews, March 14 officials, Amal Movement official, journalists with close ties to March 14 and to Hizbollah, Beirut, Tripoli, South Lebanon, September-December 2013.

⁵⁶ Crisis Group interview, Tripoli, April 2014. This agreement, known simply as the “security plan”, seems to be holding despite a few attacks on the army. Fighting in tense areas, notably between Sunni and Alawite militias in Tripoli, has subsided, as have suicide bombs in Shiite neighbourhoods. This is welcome, but the calm is precarious. First, a security-based approach is unlikely to be sustainable while socio-economic grievances mount, sectarian divisions deepen and political representation is inadequately addressed. Secondly, the security plan will last only as long as the precarious political truce among the Lebanese elite. Thirdly, many Sunni militants perceive the security measures as biased, targeting their community while ignoring Hizbollah's Syrian involvement; there

Given how extensive the movement's political reorientation has been, discontent is remarkably limited. Gone are the pillars of its previous strategy: strict focus on fighting Israel; reluctance to tolerate fitna (intra-Muslim strife); self-restraint; and confining overt action to Lebanon. It instead has embraced a regime that many Lebanese Shiites had tended to see as an unpalatable dictatorship and with which they have evinced a relative lack of sympathy. It has engaged in a war in which many see an Iranian hand.⁵⁷ Yet, even if these moves have called into question its sense of identity and priorities, they have not shaken the loyalty of its base.

At the core of Hizbollah's sustained support is the deepening Sunni-Shiite regional divide and concomitant ascent of militant (and increasingly radical) Sunni Islamism. A Shiite resident of Dahiyeh articulated the sense of existential threat that most of his coreligionists share: "At least one can live under Assad's regime. Under Salafi or jihadi rule, in contrast, what option would we [Shiites] have, except being slaughtered with hatchets?"⁵⁸ In the current climate of confessional polarisation, many Shiites see little point in a more conciliatory approach. A journalist with close ties to the movement said, "Hizbollah lost the Sunnis even prior to its military intervention in Syria. So for us Shiites the question was, why sacrifice our Syrian ally for the sake of parties that, sooner or later, were going to turn against us?"⁵⁹

The anti-Hizbollah, anti-Shiite, anti-Alawite slogans of the Syrian opposition – though used at the outset of the uprising only by a fringe – caused the Shiite community to rally around Hizbollah. These refrains, which over time have become more common – buttressed an understanding of the protests toward which Hizbollah cadres and sympathetic Shiites were predisposed.⁶⁰ Feeling threatened, they defined the uprising as a plot, projecting an Israeli-Western-Arab conspiracy and Sunni putsch onto turmoil that in fact had little to do with such concepts.

Lebanon's Shiites generally have tended to view the prospective fall of Assad's regime as the first domino in a chain that not only would deal a fatal blow to Hizbollah but would also reverse the social and political gains the Shiite community achieved have been protests against army deployments in some predominantly Sunni neighbourhoods. Crisis Group interviews, residents, local leaders, sheikhs, Tripoli-Beirut, April 2014.

⁵⁷ Unconfirmed media reports allege that Iran's Supreme Leader urged Nasrallah to dispatch forces to aid the Syrian regime. "Report: H[i]zbollah chief 'secretly' meets with Iran's Khamenei to discuss Assad support", Al-Arabiya, 22 April 2013; "Nasrallah secretly meet Khamenei for Teheran talks, discuss Syria crisis", al-Bawaba, 22 April 2013. A journalist with close ties to the Shiite movement said, "the picture of Hassan Nasrallah sitting with Supreme Leader Khamenei prior to Hizbollah making public its intervention in Syria is quite symbolic and says much about the origins of this decision". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, September 2013. Shortly after the meeting, Nasrallah said, "Syria has friends in the region and the world that will not let it fall into the hands of America, Israel and the takfiri groups". Al-Manar, 9 May 2013. This apparently was the first time he explicitly cited the takfiri threat. An Iranian official asserted that, in contrast to media reports, Nasrallah had lobbied Iran to permit him to send his fighters to Syria, using the defence of a Shiite shrine in Damascus as justification. Crisis Group interview, Tehran, 14 March 2014.

⁵⁸ Crisis Group interview, December 2013.

⁵⁹ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

⁶⁰ In the first few days of the uprising, some protesters shouted slogans, such as "No Hizbollah, no Iran, we want a Muslim who fears God", that were interpreted as accusing Shiites of apostasy. Crisis Group Report, Syria's Mutating Conflict, op. cit. Videos of Syrian protesters burning Hizbollah flags and Nasrallah's photo circulated on the internet as early as May 2011. See www.youtube.com/watch?feature=player_embedded&v=X9oKWdSquWo. Hizbollah officials gave these occurrences disproportionate weight when they concluded the uprising had a fundamentally Sunni character. Crisis Group interviews, May-December 2011.

in the wake of their country's civil war. In a supporter's words, "the alternative to Hizbollah's strengthening is Shiites' weakening".⁶¹

The movement's status among Shiites improved greatly after the 2006 war with Israel that the community perceived as a major victory and significant milestone. Hizbollah was bolstered further by the movement's swift takeover and efficient management of the relief and reconstruction effort, which silenced critics and exposed its domestic foes' incompetence or, worse, indifference to the Shiites' plight.⁶² Its constituents' trust was solidified not only because of the perceived victory, but also because Hizbollah's leadership had lived up to its promise to deliver one; Nasrallah emerged from the conflict the object of an intensified personality cult. These factors loomed large half a decade later, when he promised a decisive victory in Syria.⁶³

Attacks against the Shiite community, by exacerbating feelings of vulnerability to takfiris, fortified its support for the party.⁶⁴ A resident of the Beirut suburb of Rouweiss, targeted by an explosion in August 2013, said:

Of course, I wish we didn't have to go through all this. Of course, I wish that those who died had done so at the hands of Israelis, not Syrians. However, targeting innocent people only shows that the party has been right. Opposition armed groups in Syria are terrorists and should be eradicated. These attacks only will boost our determination and conviction that Hizbollah had to fight them before they became a greater and more dangerous threat.⁶⁵

⁶¹ He added: "Were it not for Hizbollah's power, Samir Geagea [the Christian Lebanese Forces leader] and [Former Prime Minister] Saad Hariri would control the country and deprive our community of its prerogatives". Crisis Group interview, Dahiyeh resident, November 2013.

⁶² Crisis Group interviews, Hizbollah supporters, Beirut, South Lebanon, 2009-2013.

⁶³ A Hizbollah supporter said, "Nasrallah will never fail us". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, November 2013.

⁶⁴ Hizbollah's detractors insist its behaviour is the primary reason for the rise of anti-Shiite attacks, giving scant acknowledgement to other causes. Crisis Group interviews, Beirut, December 2013.

⁶⁵ Crisis Group interview, Hizbollah sympathiser, Beirut, December 2013.

III. Challenges Ahead

Hizbollah's considerable strength and resilience notwithstanding, the Syrian conflict – and the local and regional changes it already is bringing – could prove perilous to the movement in the long term. The movement's position toward Syria should be seen in the context of changes in Lebanon since former Prime Minister Rafic Hariri's 2005 assassination, for which an international tribunal controversially indicted Hizbollah members, and the subsequent withdrawal of Syrian troops.⁶⁶ Hizbollah filled the void left by the departure of its ally and chief backer.⁶⁷ More importantly, it saw the resulting empowerment of its political opponents in the March 14 alliance and the growing influence over Lebanese politics of the foreign capitals that backed them (Washington, Paris and Riyadh) as a major threat. While the 2006 war increased Hizbollah's domestic confidence, it also raised the party's wariness toward its Lebanese opponents and especially the March 14 alliance, which it accused of plotting, with Saudi and Western sponsors, in the service of Israel.

These two turning points – the Hariri assassination and its aftermath, and the 2006 war – set Sunnis and Shiites in Lebanon on the path of rifts and radicalisation. As relations worsened, Hizbollah, which for decades had rallied Sunnis behind what is understood throughout the Arab world as resistance to Israel, increasingly came to be perceived as a sectarian militia. Its role in the Syrian conflict has taken this dynamic several steps further.

A. Endangered Strategic and Social Depth

The conflict has irreversibly altered Syria; regardless of the regime's military performance, it will be all but impossible for it to restore the situation that prevailed in 2010.⁶⁸ Several areas of the country are now in effect beyond its reach; even re-conquest would amount to little more than the occupation by alien forces of depopulated or hostile territory. Qusayr's fate is instructive. Though now "cleansed of Hizbollah's foes",⁶⁹ the battered, empty town has not returned to anything like normalcy.⁷⁰ If its former inhabitants return, their antagonism to the Shiite movement likely will prove implacable – a stark contrast with 2006, when areas now supportive of the Syrian opposition

⁶⁶ See Crisis Group Middle East Report N°100, Trial by Fire: The Politics of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon, 2 December 2010; "Four H[i]zbollah members indicted in Hariri death, says source", CNN, 1 July 2011.

⁶⁷ In 2005, Hizbollah, feeling vulnerable after Syrian troops left, joined the cabinet for the first time. Crisis Group interview, Hizbollah official, January 2009. It gradually invested in the state structure, securing key positions in the security apparatus: the military tribunal, general security and airport security; several critical army posts currently are headed by individuals with ties to it or its allies. An Hizbollah official called Syria the "guarantor of resistance". Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2009. Many credit Hizbollah's resistance for Israel's withdrawal in May 2000 from southern Lebanon after almost two decades of occupation. The movement then kept its arms, due largely to Syria's support.

⁶⁸ "Regime ties to large sectors of society are broken, its hold on broad swathes of its territory at best tenuous. Even if it survives the crisis, it likely will not recover the ability to govern effectively and will enjoy few options but to rule through terror". Crisis Group Middle East Briefing N°33, Syria's Phase of Radicalisation, 10 April 2012, p. 5. Numerous Hizbollah officials said the pre-uprising situation is irretrievable. Crisis Group interviews, Beirut, October–December 2013.

⁶⁹ Crisis Group interview, Hizbollah official, Beirut, November 2013.

⁷⁰ Crisis Group telephone interview, Syrian activist, March 2014.

hosted Shiite Lebanese refugees driven out by the Israel offensive and wholeheartedly acclaimed Hizbollah's fight.⁷¹

Convinced that it is locked in an existential conflict with the Syrian opposition, Hizbollah is investing more in the regime. In doing so, it is alienating itself from important segments of Syrian society, as well as previously supportive constituencies in Lebanon and the region. For a party that long considered its Lebanese, Syrian and wider Arab "popular embrace" (hadina shaabiyya) a major strategic asset,⁷² the deepening Sunni-Shiite divide is a significant setback. A senior party official admitted: "It is indeed the Shiite-Sunni rift that worries me most".⁷³ Questioned about this risk, he was uncompromising, arguing that Hizbollah, and the region as a whole, were living a new reality in which the old rules no longer applied and regime survival trumped all else: "There is no alternative to Assad. There are only two potential solutions: either an agreement with Bashar Assad, or total chaos. If the opposition and its allies do not accept that Assad stays on, then this war and chaos will continue for years".⁷⁴

Hizbollah's discourse, which historically has focused on the struggle against oppression, gradually gave way to an uncompromising "either with us or against us" rhetoric and passive acceptance of its Syrian ally's brutal tactics. A senior movement official said:

Why would we criticise the regime's tactics? This will only help the other side, and we can't do that. I'm not saying everything the regime is doing is good, but we won't gain anything by saying so. This is war; you have to work with what you've got. Even if we did criticise [certain aspects], the opposition wouldn't hear us because they only want you totally on their side. And the regime wouldn't like us telling it what to do. Finally, how could we even hope to address all of the Syrian people? There are two sides, and we can only address one. The pro-regime audience loves us, but it's impossible to please the other side at the same time. Take for example the Lebanese people: no matter what you say, the other side hates you.⁷⁵

Such realpolitik is a radical departure for an organisation that heretofore had been characterised by a principled ideology.

Though its leaders warn against sectarian strife, Hizbollah's role in Syria, like that of its Salafi adversaries, has helped fuel it.⁷⁶ As opposed to its clash with Sunni gunmen during the party's May 2008 takeover of west Beirut, which it justified as necessary to protect its independent communication network and as vital for the struggle against Israel,⁷⁷ Hizbollah has come to define what it is fighting for in terms ⁷¹ Crisis Group interviews and observations, Damascus and central Syria, August 2006.

⁷² Crisis Group interviews, Hizbollah officials, Beirut, August 2006-December 2010.

⁷³ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

⁷⁴ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

⁷⁵ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

⁷⁶ Nasrallah repeatedly has warned of a Sunni-Shiite rift. He accused al-Qaeda-linked takfiri militants of "trying to sow discord between Shiite and Sunni Muslims in Syria". Tehran Times, 3 July 2013. "The worst that has happened in Syria and has been going on for years is the sectarian discourse. Sectarianism is the worst and most dangerous dimension. The conflict in Syria is between two camps, two fronts, two projects, not between Sunnis and Shiites. It is not between two sects. Why are you [the opposition and its sponsors] transforming it into a battle between two sects?". Speech, Youtube, 14 June 2013. See also other speeches, Al-Manar, 25 January 2013; 25 May 2013.

⁷⁷ For background, see Crisis Group Middle East Report N°23, Lebanon: Hizbollah's Weapons Turn Inward, 15 May 2008.

of whom it is fighting against. That it describes this adversary as takfiri, rather than authentically Sunni, does little to reassure the many Sunnis who perceive Hizbollah's intervention as motivated by sectarian concerns. The party's own propaganda has undermined whatever claims it still makes to remain above the sectarian fray.

By lumping the broad ideological spectrum of Syrian rebel militants under the takfiri banner, Hizbollah does not distinguish between non-Islamists, mainstream Islamists and extremists such as al-Qaeda-style jihadis – thus strengthening the perception that its war is against Sunnis in general.⁷⁸ To many Sunnis, takfiri is merely the latest Hizbollah slur against them, provoking resentment that has bolstered jihadi recruitment and empowered Lebanese extremists.⁷⁹ The resulting animosity has boosted the fundraising capabilities of Salafists,⁸⁰ increased weapons smuggling;⁸¹ and heightened the sense that Hizbollah could be challenged. A journalist from Tripoli warned:

Hizbollah, by continuously accusing Sunnis and takfiris, is igniting Sunni radicalism. Hatred toward the Shiite party has become so deeply entrenched that many Sunnis see Koteiba al-Satem [the perpetrator of a suicide attack in Dahiyeh] as a hero.⁸²

That the murder of Hizbollah supporters is seen as welcome vengeance in some Sunni milieus indicates how profound Sunni alienation has become.⁸³

Confessional politics has facilitated regional rivalries. Iran's and Saudi Arabia's dispute has led to extraordinary forms and levels of violence, even by the region's dismal standards. Together with others such as Qatar and Turkey,⁸⁴ each has fuelled ⁷⁸ Crisis Group interviews, Lebanese and Syrian refugees, Tripoli, Beirut, October-December 2013. A Syrian activist said, "when the U.S. wages a 'war on terror', most Muslims around the world perceive it as a war against them. Hizbollah and its war on takfiris is quite the same for the Sunnis". Crisis Group interview, Tripoli, November 2013.

⁷⁹ See Crisis Group Reports, A Precarious Balancing Act; Too Close for Comfort, both op. cit.

⁸⁰ Crisis Group interviews, Salafists, sheikhs and Syrian activists, Tripoli, October-December 2013.

⁸¹ Crisis Group Report, Too Close for Comfort, op. cit., pp. 20-22.

⁸² Crisis Group interview, Beirut, January 2014.

⁸³ Crisis Group interviews and observations, Sunni sheikhs and militants, Tripoli and Beirut, November-December 2013.

⁸⁴ Having antagonised former allies such as Iran and Hizbollah, Turkey aligned itself with two conservative Sunni Gulf states, Saudi Arabia and Qatar. It is increasingly perceived by its own Alawite (in Turkey, the Alevi) community, the Syrian regime and its allies and other observers as a Sunni actor. More dangerously, at a minimum it has turned a blind eye to Sunni jihadists using its border to enter Syria. See Crisis Group Europe Reports N° 225, Blurring the Borders: Syrian Spillover Risks for Turkey, 30 April 2013; and N° 230, The Rising Costs of Turkey's Syrian Quagmire, 30 April 2014; "Is Turkey going to reconsider its Sunni sectarian policy in Syria?", The Turkey Analyst, 25 September 2013; "Turkey's sectarian war with Iran over Syria and Iraq", Al-Monitor, 4 January 2013; "Erdogan Stokes the Sectarian Fires", The New York Times, 7 October 2013; "The 'Sunnification' of Turkish policy", Al-Monitor, 1 March 2013. In Doha, Youssef al-Qaradawi, a prominent Qatar-based Egyptian cleric who heads the influential International Union of Muslim Scholars addressed a rally in deeply sectarian terms: "Every [Sunni] Muslim trained to fight and capable of doing that [must] make himself available [to fight in Syria]. Iran is pushing forward arms and men, so why do we stand idle? The leader of the Party of Satan [ie, Hizbollah] comes to fight the Sunnis Now we know what the Iranians want They want continued massacres to kill Sunnis". Qatar has reportedly expelled dozens of Lebanese Shiites supportive of Hizbollah. "Syria conflict: Cleric Qaradawi urges Sunnis to join rebels", BBC, 1 June 2013; "Qatar 'expels Lebanese after GCC H[i]zbollah decision'", Now, 20 June 2013.

sectarian polarisation while blaming the other.⁸⁵ Particularly unhelpful has been tolerance of or resort to foreign fighters, most motivated by powerful sectarian impulses. As Sunnis from Tunisia, Libya, Lebanon and the West have joined opposition rebels, Shiite Lebanese, Iranians, Iraqis, Afghans and Pakistanis have entered Syria on behalf of the regime.⁸⁶ Despite the regime's efforts to project a secular image, Hezbollah and fellow non-Syrian Shiite militants, like their Sunni counterparts, fight under a jihad banner.⁸⁷ Like their Sunni counterparts, they use highly sectarian rhetoric: for instance, they liken the war to the seventh century Karbala battle between the Prophet Muhammad's grandson, Imam Hussein, and forces loyal to the Umayyad Caliph Yazid, an event of tremendous importance to Shiites and central to the split between Islam's two main schools, Sunni and Shiite.⁸⁸

Hezbollah is an integral part of this regional struggle. In particular, it has waged a campaign against Saudi Arabia, accusing it of thwarting the formation of the Lebanese cabinet, torpedoing a peace process to end the Syrian conflict and ordering an attack on the Iranian embassy in Lebanon.⁸⁹ Adopting the same bellicose rhetoric its opponents use toward Iran, Hezbollah has fallen into the trap of sectarian politics, something that it had carefully avoided in previous years.⁹⁰

⁸⁵ Beside direct support to the Syrian regime, Iran has backed Shiite groups fighting in Syria, where it is believed to have formed an elite militia. A leaked video showed a figure described by the Iranian media as a senior Revolutionary Guard officer saying, "the current war in Syria is that of Islam versus the non-believers, good versus evil This [Islamic] front is supported by Hezbollah. The fighters are Iranians, H[i]zbollah, the Iraqi and Afghan Mujahidin and others. The opponents are Israel, Saudi Arabia, Turkey and Qatar. Plus America, England, France and Europe". "Leaked video: Iran guiding thousands of Shiite fighters to Syria", The Christian Science Monitor, 23 September 2013. Saudi Arabia has funded and provided weapons to Syrian rebels, while quelling Shiite protesters at home and militarily intervening in Bahrain to thwart a popular uprising, perceived as predominantly Shiite. "Saudi Arabia clashes in eastern province of Qatif", BBC, 4 October 2011; "Saudi troops enter Bahrain to help put down unrest", The New York Times, 14 March 2011.

⁸⁶ "Foreign fighters flood both sides in Syrian war", NPR News, 17 January 2014. "As foreign fighters flood Syria, fears of a new extremist haven", The New York Times, 8 August 2013; "Leaked video", op. cit.; "Video appears to show H[i]zbollah and Iraqi Shiites fighting in Syria", The Christian Science Monitor, 18 January 2013.

⁸⁷ Hezbollah's media outlets often announce the death of movement fighters in Syria killed while performing their "jihadi duty". See, for instance, al-Manar, 28 December 2013; 23 April 2014.

⁸⁸ Social media outlets teemed with pages and videos calling for defence of religious shrines in Syria and praising young Shiites who died in a jihad to protect them, eg, www.facebook.com/groups/466006650098572/#_=_; www.facebook.com/AldfanMrqdAlsdydZynblyhaAlslam; the display of banners, photos and songs glorifying Shiite symbols, previously a practice mainly during Ashura [commemoration of Imam Hussein's death], is now omnipresent in predominantly Shiite areas. A song glorifying Sayyida Zeinab, sister of Imam Hussein, was loudly played in Beirut's airport. Many interlocutors, including some Shiites, expressed annoyance with practices viewed as "provocative and defiant". Crisis Group interviews, Shiite journalist, Beirut, December 2013; residents, Beirut, 2013. Crisis Group observations, Beirut neighbourhoods and airport, 2013-May 2014.

⁸⁹ "Hariri blasts Nasrallah over Saudi accusations", The Daily Star, 14 November 2013; "Riyadh seeking to derail Syria peace talks: Nasrallah", The Daily Star, 28 October 2013; "Nasrallah links Saudi Arabia to Iran embassy attack", Now, 3 December 2013.

⁹⁰ Hezbollah's opponents regularly accuse Iran of controlling Lebanon or employing Hezbollah to impose its will. Some have gone so far as to call on it "to keep its hands off Lebanon", vowing to "end the Iranian revolutionary occupation in Lebanon so that it can remain a country for dialogue, pluralism, democracy, modernity and openness". Former Prime Minister Saad Hariri said, "I know [Nasrallah] won't listen to a Lebanese voice [to end participation in Syria] because the Iranian Fatwa in his ears is stronger and pure". "Future vows to end Iranian 'occupation' of Lebanon", and "Future bloc to Iran: hands off Lebanon", The Daily Star, 17 December 2013; 7 February 2014.

There is no easy exit from this trap. Ultimately, neither side can win the Sunni-Shiite struggle; the backlash against Hizbollah's intervention in Syria is already revealing the limits of its military power. While the movement has efficiently fought the Israeli army, its stockpiles of rockets are less effective against jihadi militants. Hizbollah has been trained to fight guerrilla-style battles against a much larger army, not defend itself against suicide bombers. That jihadi-linked attacks target civilians rather than military forces makes them all the more difficult for the movement to contain. Any attempt to seal off its home community – particularly the Dahiyeh suburb in southern Beirut – would gravely disrupt its ability to function normally; measures taken to secure Beirut's Shiite neighbourhoods have already disrupted social and commercial life.⁹¹ Sealing off the Sunni areas of Lebanon where those who facilitate attacks on Shiite targets are thought to hide likely would reduce the threat at best only temporarily.⁹²

The trap is growing tighter, because its adversaries are convinced that they must actively and urgently confront Hizbollah. Many Lebanese Sunnis trace a history of political events that leads inexorably to this conclusion: the 2005 killing of Sunni leader Rafic Hariri; Hizbollah's swift takeover of the capital in May 2008; and its overthrow of the Saad Hariri-led government in January 2011. Such developments are seen as part of a wider pattern playing out in other countries, such as Iraq, where Shiite dominance and Iranian influence generate humiliation, oppression and injustice among many Sunnis.⁹³

Hizbollah's challenge is all the greater given the over one million Syrian refugees in Lebanon, the vast majority of whom are Sunni and resentful of the movement's military role in their country. A Syrian activist said, "Syrians will never forget that Hizbollah fought and killed their families. We might reconcile among each other. However, Hizbollah will always remain an intruder that killed Syrians and occupied Syria".⁹⁴ The presence of Syrian refugees in Shiite areas generates intense suspicion and distrust among the party's supporters.⁹⁵ Only a small minority has been politically and militarily active, but Lebanon could yet witness militancy among refugees. According to a senior security official:

If the presence of Syrians refugees lasts for too long, it could become a greater danger than the Palestinians'. They are still busy settling up their own situation. After a while, they will engage in the political game. There are real risks of their politicisation. In some villages, the number of refugees is equal to that of Lebanese.⁹⁶

⁹¹ See "Social, economic tolls wear down Dahiyeh residents", Now, 2 February 2014. www.southlebanon.org/?p=109831

⁹² Shiite residents, protesting rockets and suicide car bombings targeting their community, blocked the main road to the Sunni village of Aarsal in the Bekaa. Associated Press, 19 March 2014.

⁹³ Crisis Group interviews, Sunni officials, residents, clerics, activists, Beirut, Akkar, Tripoli, Saida, Aarsal, December 2011-April 2014. Crisis Group Middle East Report N°96, Lebanon's Politics: The Sunni Community and Hariri's Future Current, 26 May 2010.

⁹⁴ Crisis Group interview, Tripoli, November 2013.

⁹⁵ In several cases, suicide bombings have been followed by attacks against Syrians. Consequently, refugees stayed off the streets in Shiite areas during a Hizbollah-organised march to commemorate Ashura. Crisis Group observations, November 2013. A shopkeeper in a Shiite neighborhood said, "Hizbollah members and Lebanese authorities didn't allow any stranger in or out. One Syrian was even not allowed to go to his house". Crisis Group interview, Khandaq al-Ghamiq, November 2013.

⁹⁶ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, December 2013.

B. Hizbollah's Metamorphosis: Whither the Resistance?

For the Shi'ite party, the struggle against Israel, officially at least, remains its ultimate goal, the rationale for its creation and continued existence as a resistance movement. It still serves today as a rallying call for its partisans, who describe Israel as the greatest threat in the region.⁹⁷ Hizbollah insists its involvement in Syria does not affect its ability to confront Israel. A senior party official insisted: "We are still ready for a fight against Israel. We have what you can call special forces fighting in Syria, and their presence there does not detract us from the resistance [against Israel]".⁹⁸ Official discourse argues that the jihadis are in league with Israel, so what appears as two struggles is in fact one.⁹⁹

However, even for a skilled communicator like Nasrallah, convincingly linking those struggles is a challenge. Claims that the Syrian rebellion is "under the control of the Israeli-American-takfiri powers"¹⁰⁰ strains credulity in a way that the party line rarely has in the past. Even some within the Shi'ite movement's inner circle are doubtful. A journalist close to the movement said, "we know that these arguments don't make much sense. They are designed for public consumption".¹⁰¹

With its capacities overstretched, it is not clear how competently Hizbollah could confront Israel should the eventuality arise. Not only has it sent some of its seasoned troops into Syria, but it finds itself compelled to dedicate ever-more resources to securing its heartland against domestic threats. It is unknown if and how the Syrian regime, weakened and transformed, could support its ally meaningfully should conflict with Israel be renewed. It has depleted much of its conventional and unconventional military assets, and any provocative actions, such as boosting arms transfers to Hizbollah, might prompt Israeli retaliation that would threaten its survival.

Hizbollah's home front also looks very different than in 2006. Important Lebanese, Syrian and Arab constituencies may continue to support it against Israel, but the movement now has to contend with hostile domestic and Syrian elements that might seize an opportunity provided by an Israeli attack. Moreover, Hizbollah's popular base would have a harder time seeking refuge in strife-torn Syria.

Support to Assad has also strained Hizbollah's relations with its former close ally, Hamas, leaving it largely devoid of significant ties to the Palestinian cause it espouses. Despite attempts to repair relations between the Palestinian movement and the so-called axis of resistance, rapprochement remains elusive.¹⁰² Worse still from Hiz-

⁹⁷ Crisis Group interviews, Hizbollah members and partisans, Beirut, South Lebanon, October-December 2013.

⁹⁸ Another official added: "The resistance [to Israel] rests on completely separate military assets we are not committing to the Syrian front". Crisis Group interviews, Beirut, December 2013.

⁹⁹ In May 2013, Nasrallah declared: "There is an axis led by the United States, while the other players are working under its orders. Everyone knows this axis is supported by Israel, while al-Qaeda and other takfiri organisations from around the world were paid to take part in it The takfiris are the most prevalent group in the Syrian opposition". Naharnet, 25 May 2013.

¹⁰⁰ "Nasrallah says H[i]zbollah will not bow to sectarian threats", Now, 14 June 2013. He also said, "[i]f Syria falls into the hands of America, Israel and takfiris, the resistance will be besieged and Israel will enter Lebanon and impose its will", "H[i]zbollah's war in Syria threatens to engulf Lebanon", The Independent, 26 May 2013.

¹⁰¹ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, November 2013.

¹⁰² "Hamas and Iran in talks to repair ties", The Telegraph, 1 August 2013. Crisis Group Report, The Next Round in Gaza, op.cit., p. 4. A Hamas official said, "[t]oday we can't speak of a rapprochement with Iran. We don't have hostile relations with them, but we don't get anything from them either". Ibid, p. 9.

bollah's perspective, the regime in Damascus has been reaching out to the Fatah leadership based in Ramallah – Hamas's rival – which, among adherents to the resistance narrative, is widely seen to lack legitimacy as a representative of the Palestinian struggle.¹⁰³

The reputational harm to Hizbollah is no less important than the material. Once it was widely respected among Sunnis in Syria and the region; now, by contrast, many Syrians and Lebanese see Israel as a relatively benign enemy.¹⁰⁴ The Syrian battlefields are killing off veterans of the struggle against Israel¹⁰⁵ and crowning new heroes who are making their reputation against a different foe – and whose battlefield expertise is very different from those they are replacing. In this sense, the longer the fight in Syria continues, the less risk the movement will likely pose to Israel.

C. Hubris?

In recent years, Hizbollah has sought to project overwhelming power whenever engaging a rival, an important shift from the military doctrine to which it adhered in the 1990s.¹⁰⁶ In the wake of Israel's withdrawal from south Lebanon in 2000, successive threats to its political standing and military infrastructure have prompted it to step more forcefully into the Lebanese political scene: its insistence on retaining its arsenal following Israel's withdrawal;¹⁰⁷ the repercussions of the 2005 Rafic Hariri assassination and subsequent withdrawal of Syrian troops from Lebanon; tensions over the international tribunal investigating Hariri's murder; and the 2006 war against Israel and suggestions that the March 14 alliance sought to undermine the resistance.¹⁰⁸ After the 2006 war, the Shiite movement became increasingly confrontational, adopting more threatening rhetoric and turning its weapons inward.¹⁰⁹

Likewise, the movement and its supporters repeatedly have resorted to intimidation to silence dissenting voices within the Shiite community. In May 2008, Shiite ¹⁰³ In October 2013, Bashar Assad met with Abbas Zaki, special envoy of Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas. Al-Manar, 7 October 2013.

¹⁰⁴ Comments such as "the Syrian regime and its allies are worse than Israel" and "Israel has never done what Assad is doing" frequently can be heard among pro-opposition Lebanese residents, Syrian activists and refugees. Crisis Group interviews, Beirut, Tripoli, October 2013–April 2014.

¹⁰⁵ The profile and role of Hizbollah's fighters killed in Syria is not clear. However, movement officials and media have referred to some as commanders, including senior ones. See, eg, Press TV, 30 November 2013; Naharnet, 8 December 2013; Al-Manar, 19 December 2013, 18 April 2014.

¹⁰⁶ Hizbollah's primary focus 1990–2000 was on Israel. It expanded its social network in predominantly Shiite areas but let the Shiite Amal Movement attend to the community's political needs.

¹⁰⁷ The Christian opposition, Druze leader Walid Jumblatt and Rafic Hariri, believing Israel's withdrawal would mean Hizbollah's disarmament, urged deploying the army on the southern border.

¹⁰⁸ For background, see Crisis Group Middle East Reports N° 48, Lebanon: Managing the Gathering Storm, 5 December 2005; N° 57, Israel/Palestine/Lebanon: Climbing out of the Abyss, 25 July 2006; N° 69, Hizbollah and the Lebanese Crisis, 10 October 2007; Trial by Fire, op. cit.; and N° 97, Drums of War: Israel and the "Axis of Resistance", 2 August 2010.

¹⁰⁹ On Hizbollah's May 2008 takeover of Beirut, see Crisis Group Briefing, Lebanon: Hizbollah's Weapons Turn Inward, op. cit. Another example was the brief deployment of its unarmed militants in Beirut's streets during the February 2011 political crisis. This show of force, called in Lebanon the "incident of the black shirts", was intended to warn its opponents against renominating Saad Hariri as prime minister after Hizbollah and its allies toppled him. Another example was the response to the indictment of party members by the international tribunal investigating Rafic Hariri's assassination. Nasrallah said, "[m]istaken is the one who thinks that we will allow the arrest or detainment of any of our mujahidin. We will cut off the hand that tries to get to them". The Daily Star, 12 November 2010.

militants ousted the then-Tyr mufti, Ali al-Amine, looting and burning his office. He said, “they were making an example. They were sending a clear message that this would be the fate of anyone who opposes them”.¹¹⁰ Other anti-Hizbollah Shiites have similar stories of intimidation.¹¹¹ This muscle-flexing is mirrored among the rank and file, whose behaviour is seen as increasingly arrogant and contemptuous. In Hizbollah heartlands, Shiite residents complain about what they call the thuggishness of some community members. Even ardent supporters admit that in the current militarized environment, Hizbollah’s aggressiveness is manifest at home. A partisan conceded: “Many Shiites feel that Hizbollah’s power is their own, as individuals. This is reflected in some negative social behaviour. Some adopt provocative attitudes even in the smallest issues, such as a fight over a parking spot.”¹¹²

Such behaviour is by no means limited to the Shiite community in Lebanon, but other groups tend to believe that Shiites likely will not be held accountable, due to the intervention of Hizbollah and the smaller Amal Movement, which, they think, sometimes dissuade security forces and the judiciary from arresting or detaining Shiites.¹¹³ “I don’t go to Dahiyeh, there are lots of thugs there”, a taxi driver said. “I had a car accident once. The person responsible for the accident, insulted me, threatened me and walked away. I just could do nothing about it”. A woman whose son was hit by a car in a Shiite neighbourhood said, “I didn’t file a complaint, I just renounced my right [to claim hospital expenses]. I cannot fight with a Shiite”.¹¹⁴

In Syria, too, Hizbollah has projected excessive power. What began as a limited operation to boost the regime and deter its enemies across the border has expanded into a wide-ranging intervention, shifting the movement’s posture from reactive defence to what looks to many like pro-active belligerence. A party official said candidly: “When Hizbollah publicly revealed its intervention in Syria, the message to its foes was clear: the movement is a force to be reckoned with”.¹¹⁵ After Nasrallah declared in April 2014 that the regime was safe, and Syria’s territorial integrity was guaran-

¹¹⁰ Crisis Group interview, Beirut, November 2013. An anti-Hizbollah journalist commented: “When I raise concerns about Hizbollah’s dominance and the need to confront it, many would tell me: ‘haven’t you seen what they did to Sayyed [a religious honorific] Ali al-Amine!’” Crisis Group interview, Beirut, November 2013.

¹¹¹ Crisis Group interviews, anti-Hizbollah Shiites, Beirut, South Lebanon, October–December 2013. A journalist said, “when you live in Dahiyeh and are opposed to Hizbollah, you must accept to lead a difficult life. You will probably feel isolated. If you oppose, or simply don’t follow Hizbollah, you can’t run a business. Party members, partisans, supporters will just boycott your shop”. Crisis Group interview, Beirut, November 2013. Another said, “I and my family members are recurrently insulted and threatened. Any visitor or guest I received will be followed by Hizbollah militants. Some friends have asked to meet outside Dahiyeh”. Crisis Group interview, Beirut, October 2013. An article in pro-Hizbollah Al-Akhabar, “Wikileaks: America’s Shiite tools in Lebanon”, accused several Shiite journalists and figures who met with U.S. officials of being agents and informers. A journalist cited in it said, “in Shiite milieus, accusing someone of working for the Americans amounts to a charge of treason. This article was calling for our extermination”. Crisis Group interview, Beirut, November 2013. A young woman who criticised Hizbollah’s support to the Syrian regime was threatened and insulted on Facebook and banned from returning to her village. Al-Modon, 23 May 2013.

¹¹² Crisis Group interview, Hizbollah supporter, Beirut, November 2013.

¹¹³ Across the political spectrum, parties and leaders protect supporters, blocking accountability for criminal or thuggish behaviour. However Hizbollah, in some areas it controls, denies access to state security forces, giving rise to belief Shiites are more sheltered than other communities.

¹¹⁴ Crisis Group interviews, Christian and Sunni neighbourhood residents respectively, Beirut, November 2013.

¹¹⁵ Crisis Group interview, Hizbollah official, Beirut, October 2013.

teed, the movement not only left its troops next door, but it also seemed committed to invest yet more in the hope of complete victory.¹¹⁶ The not-so-subtle subtext is that Hezbollah's capacity and ambition have grown to the extent that it can forcibly impose the rules of the game, not just in Lebanon but in Syria too.

Its apparent hubris has provoked its enemies and weakened vital alliances throughout the region. Confronted with a new range of threats, Hezbollah has become exposed; by pursuing supremacy, it has become more vulnerable.

¹¹⁶ As-Safir, 8 April 2014. Naïm Qassem, Hezbollah's deputy secretary general, said, "until now we consider our presence in Syria necessary and fundamental", Reuters, 9 April 2014; Nasrallah said, "it is natural for Bashar Assad to run for the [Syrian presidential] elections", and Qassem added: "I believe the election will take place on its due date, and Assad will run and win decisively", ibid. Two weeks after these statements, the Syrian regime announced presidential elections for June 2014. Opponents expect they will confirm Assad's victory and end the prospect of a negotiated solution. The Independent, 21 April 2013.

IV. Conclusion

Hizbollah has many reasons to withdraw its troops from Syria, as critics call upon it to do.¹¹⁷ The regime's immediate survival is no longer at stake. Soon the long-term costs of extended intervention will become clear. Stopping all Lebanese involvement in the Syrian war is the best way to insulate Lebanon from a more tragic and bloody escalation. Ideally, a binding UN Security Council resolution banning all foreign fighters from Syria would be the natural way to de-escalate the conflict.

In practice, however, it is unrealistic to expect either regional or global powers to pursue such a course. In what has become a zero-sum conflict, the stakes are too high and the movement's involvement too deep to retract. Moreover, from Hizbollah's perspective the rising costs of its intervention in Syria still do not counterbalance its immediate gains: averting the downfall of the regime, dislodging rebels from areas adjacent to Lebanon's borders and preventing worse outrages against Shiites. It is keen to prove the soundness of its course by repeatedly invoking the takfiri threat. It seems uninterested in accommodation, not least because suing for compromise, in the idiom of the region, has become tantamount to weakness and retreat and would undermine the narrative the movement has articulated as justification for its endeavour. As an Islamist official put it, "Hizbollah has no option but to return home with a clear-cut victory".¹¹⁸

In the process of pursuing such a victory however, Hizbollah is fuelling the very dangers it is trying to combat. As a result, the Shiite party and its constituency seem more vulnerable than ever before to external threats, and the strategic depth deemed essential to its struggle with Israel looks increasingly endangered.

The Syrian conflict has yet to play out fully in Lebanon, but jihadism, still limited, is on the rise. Lebanon's weak security apparatus, eroding state institutions and multi-confessional society render it vulnerable to the gathering threats. In Lebanon as in Syria, any meaningful solution must address, among other issues, the Sunni-Shiite divide that Hizbollah and its enemies are pushing to new levels.

Beirut/Brussels, 27 May 2014

¹¹⁷ See, eg, the call by Lebanese intellectual Fawaz Traboulsi, As-Safir, 10 October 2012; and the speech of the ex-president of the Syrian National Coalition addressed to Nasrallah, www.facebook.com/ahmad.mouaz.alkhatib.alhasani/posts/637999119560485.

¹¹⁸ Crisis Group interview, Jamaa Islamiyya leader (the Lebanese branch of the Muslim Brotherhood), Beirut, December 2013.

Appendix A: Map of Lebanon's Border with Syria

Appendix B: About the International Crisis Group

The International Crisis Group (Crisis Group) is an independent, non-profit, non-governmental organisation, with some 125 staff members on five continents, working through field-based analysis and high-level advocacy to prevent and resolve deadly conflict.

Crisis Group's approach is grounded in field research. Teams of political analysts are located within or close by countries at risk of outbreak, escalation or recurrence of violent conflict. Based on information and assessments from the field, it produces analytical reports containing practical recommendations targeted at key international decision-takers. Crisis Group also publishes CrisisWatch, a twelve-page monthly bulletin, providing a succinct regular update on the state of play in all the most significant situations of conflict or potential conflict around the world.

Crisis Group's reports and briefing papers are distributed widely by email and made available simultaneously on the website, www.crisisgroup.org. Crisis Group works closely with governments and those who influence them, including the media, to highlight its crisis analyses and to generate support for its policy prescriptions.

The Crisis Group Board – which includes prominent figures from the fields of politics, diplomacy, business and the media – is directly involved in helping to bring the reports and recommendations to the attention of senior policy-makers around the world. Crisis Group is co-chaired by former UN Deputy Secretary-General and Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), Mark Malloch-Brown, and former U.S. Undersecretary of State and Ambassador Thomas Pickering. Its President and Chief Executive since July 2009 has been Louise Arbour, former UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and Chief Prosecutor for the International Criminal Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda.

Crisis Group's international headquarters is in Brussels, and the organisation has offices or representation in 26 locations: Baghdad/Suleimaniya, Bangkok, Beijing, Beirut, Bishkek, Bogotá, Brussels, Cairo, Dakar, Dubai, Gaza City, Islamabad, Istanbul, Jerusalem, Johannesburg, Kabul, London, Mexico City, Moscow, Nairobi, New York, Seoul, Toronto, Tripoli, Tunis, Washington DC. Crisis Group currently covers some 70 areas of actual or potential conflict across four continents. In Africa, this includes, Burkina Faso, Burundi, Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Kenya, Liberia, Madagascar, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Somalia, South Sudan, Sudan, Uganda and Zimbabwe; in Asia, Afghanistan, Indonesia, Kashmir, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Malaysia, Myanmar, Nepal, North Korea, Pakistan, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Taiwan Strait, Tajikistan, Thailand, Timor-Leste, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan; in Europe, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Cyprus, Georgia, Kosovo, Macedonia, North Caucasus, Serbia and Turkey; in the Middle East and North Africa, Algeria, Bahrain, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Israel-Palestine, Jordan, Lebanon, Libya, Morocco, Syria, Tunisia, Western Sahara and Yemen; and in Latin America and the Caribbean, Colombia, Guatemala, Mexico and Venezuela.

In 2014, Crisis Group receives financial support from, or is in the process of renewing relationships with, a wide range of governments, institutional foundations, and private sources. Crisis Group receives support from the following governmental departments and agencies: Australian Agency for International Development, Austrian Development Agency, Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Canadian International Development Research Centre, Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Department of Foreign Affairs, Trade and Development, Deutsche Gesellschaft für Internationale Zusammenarbeit (GIZ), Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs, European Union Instrument for Stability, French Ministry of Foreign Affairs, German Federal Foreign Office, Irish Aid, Principality of Liechtenstein, Luxembourg Ministry of Foreign Affairs, New Zealand (Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade), Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Swedish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Swiss Federal Department of Foreign Affairs, United Kingdom Department for International Development, U.S. Agency for International Development.

Crisis Group also holds relationships with the following institutional and private foundations: Adesium Foundation, Carnegie Corporation of New York, The Elders, Henry Luce Foundation, Humanity United, John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation, Oak Foundation, Open Society Foundations, Open Society Initiative for West Africa, Ploughshares Fund, Rockefeller Brothers Fund, Stanley Foundation and VIVA Trust.

May 2014

Appendix C: Reports and Briefings on the Middle East and North Africa since 2011

Israel/Palestine

Gaza: The Next Israeli-Palestinian War?, Middle East Briefing N°30, 24 March 2011 (also available in Hebrew and Arabic).

Radical Islam in Gaza, Middle East/North Africa Report N°104, 29 March 2011 (also available in Arabic and Hebrew).

Palestinian Reconciliation: Plus Ça Change ..., Middle East Report N°110, 20 July 2011 (also available in Arabic and Hebrew).

Curb Your Enthusiasm: Israel and Palestine after the UN, Middle East Report N°112, 12 September 2011 (also available in Arabic and Hebrew).

Back to Basics: Israel's Arab Minority and the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict, Middle East Report N°119, 14 March 2012 (also available in Arabic).

The Emperor Has No Clothes: Palestinians and the End of the Peace Process, Middle East Report N°122, 7 May 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Light at the End of their Tunnels? Hamas & the Arab Uprisings, Middle East Report N°129, 14 August 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Israel and Hamas: Fire and Ceasefire in a New Middle East, Middle East Report N°133, 22 November 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Extreme Makeover? (I): Israel's Politics of Land and Faith in East Jerusalem, Middle East Report N°134, 20 December 2012 (also available in Arabic and Hebrew).

Extreme Makeover? (II): The Withering of Arab Jerusalem, Middle East Report N°135, 20 December 2012 (also available in Arabic and Hebrew).

Buying Time? Money, Guns and Politics in the West Bank, Middle East Report N°142, 29 May 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Leap of Faith: Israel's National Religious and the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict, Middle East Report N°147, 21 November 2013 (also available in Arabic and Hebrew).

The Next Round in Gaza, Middle East Report N°149, 25 March 2014 (also available in Arabic).

Egypt/Syria/Lebanon

Popular Protest in North Africa and the Middle East (I): Egypt Victorious?, Middle East/North Africa Report N°101, 24 February 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Uncharted Waters: Thinking Through Syria's Dynamics, Middle East Briefing N°31, 24 November 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Popular Protest in North Africa and the Middle East (VI): The Syrian People's Slow-motion Revolution, Middle East Report N°108, 6 July 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Popular Protest in North Africa and the Middle East (VII): The Syrian Regime's Slow-motion Suicide, Middle East Report N°109, 13 July 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Lebanon's Palestinian Dilemma: The Struggle Over Nahr al-Bared, Middle East Report N°117, 1 March 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Now or Never: A Negotiated Transition for Syria, Middle East Briefing N°32, 5 March 2012 (also available in Arabic and Russian).

Syria's Phase of Radicalisation, Middle East Briefing N°33, 10 April 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Lost in Transition: The World According to Egypt's SCAF, Middle East/North Africa Report N°121, 24 April 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Syria's Mutating Conflict, Middle East Report N°128, 1 August 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Tentative Jihad: Syria's Fundamentalist Opposition, Middle East Report N°131, 12 October 2012 (also available in Arabic).

A Precarious Balancing Act: Lebanon and the Syrian conflict, Middle East Report N°132, 22 November 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Syria's Kurds: A Struggle Within a Struggle, Middle East Report N°136, 22 January 2013 (also available in Arabic and Kurdish).

Too Close For Comfort: Syrians in Lebanon, Middle East Report N°141, 13 May 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Syria's Metastasising Conflicts, Middle East Report N°143, 27 June 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Marching in Circles: Egypt's Dangerous Second Transition, Middle East/North Africa Briefing N°35, 7 August 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Anything But Politics: The State of Syria's Political Opposition, Middle East Report N°146, 17 October 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Flight of Icarus? The PYD's Precarious Rise in Syria, Middle East Report N°151, 8 May 2014 (also available in Arabic).

Iran and the P5+1: Solving the Nuclear Rubik's Cube, Middle East Report N°152, 9 May 2014.

North Africa

Popular Protests in North Africa and the Middle East (IV): Tunisia's Way, Middle East/North Africa Report N°106, 28 April 2011 (also available in French).

Popular Protest in North Africa and the Middle East (V): Making Sense of Libya, Middle East/North Africa Report N°107, 6 June 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Holding Libya Together: Security Challenges after Qadhafi, Middle East/North Africa Report N°115, 14 December 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Tunisia: Combatting Impunity, Restoring Security, Middle East/North Africa Report N°123, 9 May 2012 (only available in French).

Tunisia: Confronting Social and Economic Challenges, Middle East/North Africa Report N°124, 6 June 2012 (only available in French).

Divided We Stand: Libya's Enduring Conflicts, Middle East/North Africa Report N°130, 14 September 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Tunisia: Violence and the Salafi Challenge, Middle East/North Africa Report N°137, 13 February 2013 (also available in French and Arabic).

Trial by Error: Justice in Post-Qadhafi Libya, Middle East/North Africa Report N°140, 17 April 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Tunisia's Borders: Jihadism and Contraband, Middle East/North Africa Report N°148, 28 November 2013 (also available in Arabic and French).

Iraq/Iran/Gulf

Popular Protest in North Africa and the Middle East (II): Yemen between Reform and Revolution, Middle East Report N°102, 10 March 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Iraq and the Kurds: Confronting Withdrawal Fears, Middle East Report N°103, 28 March 2011 (also available in Arabic and Kurdish).

Popular Protests in North Africa and the Middle East (III): The Bahrain Revolt, Middle East Report N°105, 4 April 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Popular Protest in North Africa and the Middle East (VIII): Bahrain's Rocky Road to Reform, Middle East Report N°111, 28 July 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Failing Oversight: Iraq's Unchecked Government, Middle East Report N°113, 26 September 2011 (also available in Arabic).

Breaking Point? Yemen's Southern Question, Middle East Report N°114, 20 October 2011 (also available in Arabic).

In Heavy Waters: Iran's Nuclear Program, the Risk of War and Lessons from Turkey, Middle East Report N°116, 23 February 2012 (also available in Arabic and Turkish).

Popular Protest in North Africa and the Middle East (IX): Dallying with Reform in a Divided Jordan, Middle East Report N°118, 12 March 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Iraq and the Kurds: The High-Stakes Hydrocarbons Gambit, Middle East Report N°120, 19 April 2012 (also available in Arabic).

The P5+1, Iran and the Perils of Nuclear Brinkmanship, Middle East Briefing N°34, 15 June 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Yemen: Enduring Conflicts, Threatened Transition, Middle East Report N°125, 3 July 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Déjà Vu All Over Again: Iraq's Escalating Political Crisis, Middle East Report N°126, 30 July 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Iraq's Secular Opposition: The Rise and Decline of Al-Iraqiya, Middle East Report N°127, 31 July 2012 (also available in Arabic).

Spider Web: The Making and Unmaking of Iran Sanctions, Middle East Report N°138, 25 February 2013 (also available in Farsi).

Yemen's Military-Security Reform: Seeds of New Conflict?, Middle East Report N°139, 4 April 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Great Expectations: Iran's New President and the Nuclear Talks, Middle East Briefing N°36, 13 August 2013 (also available in Farsi).

Make or Break: Iraq's Sunnis and the State, Middle East Report N°144, 14 August 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Yemen's Southern Question: Avoiding a Breakdown, Middle East Report N°145, 25 September 2013 (also available in Arabic).

Iraq: Falluja's Faustian Bargain, Middle East Report N°150, 28 April 2014 (also available in Arabic).

Appendix D: International Crisis Group Board of Trustees

CO-CHAIRS

Lord (Mark) Malloch-Brown
Former UN Deputy Secretary-General and Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP)

Thomas R Pickering
Former U.S. Undersecretary of State; Ambassador to the UN, Russia, India, Israel, Jordan, El Salvador and Nigeria

PRESIDENT & CEO

Louise Arbour
Former UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and Chief Prosecutor for the International Criminal Tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda

VICE-CHAIRS

Ayo Obe
Legal Practitioner, Lagos, Nigeria

Ghassan Salamé
Dean, Paris School of International Affairs, Sciences Po

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

Cheryl Carolus
Former South African High Commissioner to the UK and Secretary General of the ANC

Maria Livanos Cattau
Former Secretary-General of the International Chamber of Commerce

Frank Giustra
President & CEO, Fiore Financial Corporation

George Soros
Chairman, Open Society Institute

Pär Stenbäck
Former Foreign Minister of Finland

OTHER BOARD MEMBERS

Morton Abramowitz
Former U.S. Assistant Secretary of State and Ambassador to Turkey

Kofi Annan
Former Secretary-General of the United Nations; Nobel Peace Prize (2001)

Nahum Barnea
Chief Columnist for Yedioth Ahronoth, Israel

Samuel Berger
Chair, Albright Stonebridge Group LLC; Former U.S. National Security Adviser

Emma Bonino
Former Foreign Minister of Italy and Vice-President of the Senate; Former European Commissioner for Humanitarian Aid

Micheline Calmy-Rey
Former President of the Swiss Confederation and Foreign Affairs Minister

Wesley Clark
Former NATO Supreme Allied Commander

Sheila Coronel
Toni Stabile Professor of Practice in Investigative Journalism; Director, Toni Stabile Center for Investigative Journalism, Columbia University, U.S.

Mark Eyskens
Former Prime Minister of Belgium

Joschka Fischer
Former Foreign Minister of Germany

Lykke Friis
Former Climate & Energy Minister and Minister of Gender Equality of Denmark; Former Prorector at the University of Copenhagen

Jean-Marie Guéhenno
Arnold Saltzman Professor of War and Peace Studies, Columbia University; Former UN Under-Secretary-General for Peacekeeping Operations

Lena Hjelm-Wallén
Former Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Sweden

Mo Ibrahim
Founder and Chair, Mo Ibrahim Foundation; Founder, Celtel International

Asma Jahangir
President of the Supreme Court Bar Association of Pakistan, Former UN Special Rapporteur on the Freedom of Religion or Belief

Wadah Khanfar
Co-Founder, Al Sharq Forum; Former Director General, Al Jazeera Network

Wim Kok
Former Prime Minister of the Netherlands

Ricardo Lagos
Former President of Chile

Joanne Leedom-Ackerman
Former International Secretary of PEN International; Novelist and journalist, U.S.

Lalit Mansingh
Former Foreign Secretary of India, Ambassador to the U.S. and High Commissioner to the UK

Benjamin Mkapa
Former President of Tanzania

Laurence Parisot
President, French Business Confederation (MEDEF)

Karim Raslan
Founder, Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer of KRA Group

Paul Reynolds
President & Chief Executive Officer, Canaccord Financial Inc.

Javier Solana
Former EU High Representative for Common Foreign and Security Policy, NATO Secretary General and Foreign Minister of Spain

Liv Monica Stubholt
Senior Vice President for Strategy and Communication, Kvaerner ASA; Former State Secretary for the Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs

Lawrence H. Summers
Former Director of the U.S. National Economic Council and Secretary of the U.S. Treasury; President Emeritus of Harvard University

Wang Jisi
Dean, School of International Studies, Peking University; Member, Foreign Policy Advisory Committee of the Chinese Foreign Ministry

Wu Jianmin
Executive Vice Chairman, China Institute for Innovation and Development Strategy; Member, Foreign Policy Advisory Committee of the Chinese Foreign Ministry; Former Ambassador of China to the UN (Geneva) and France

Lionel Zinsou
CEO, PAI Partners

PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL

A distinguished group of individual and corporate donors providing essential support and expertise to Crisis Group.

Anonymous (3)	Frank Holmes	Pierre Mirabaud	Shearman & Sterling
Frank Caufield	Investec Asset	Ford Nicholson & Lisa	LLP
Dow Chemical	Management	Wolverton	White & Case LLP
Andrew Groves	Steve Killelea

INTERNATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

Individual and corporate supporters who play a key role in Crisis Group's efforts to prevent deadly conflict.

CORPORATE	Silk Road Finance Ltd	Neil & Sandra DeFeo	Griff Norquist
APCO Worldwide Inc.	Statoil	Family Foundation	Geoffrey R. Hoguet &
Atlas Copco AB	Talisman Energy	Neemat Frem	Ana Luisa Ponti
BP	Yapi Merkezi	Seth & Jane Ginns	Kerry Propper
Chevron	Construction and	Alan Griffiths	Michael L. Riordan
Equinox Partners	Industry Inc.	Rita E. Hauser	Nina K. Solarz
FTI Consulting	INDIVIDUAL	George Kellner	Horst Sporer
Lockwood Financial	Anonymous	Faisal Khan	VIVA Trust
Ltd	Stanley Bergman &	Zelmira Koch Polk	Stelios S. Zavvos
MasterCard	Edward Bergman	Elliott Kulick
PTT Public Company	David Brown	David Levy
Limited		Leslie Lishon
Shell		Harriet Mouchly-Weiss

SENIOR ADVISERS

Former Board Members who maintain an association with Crisis Group, and whose advice and support are called on (to the extent consistent with any other office they may be holding at the time).

Martti Ahtisaari Chairman Emeritus	Eugene Chien	Matthew McHugh
George Mitchell Chairman Emeritus	Joaquim Alberto	Miklós Németh
Gareth Evans President Emeritus	Chissano	Christine Ockrent
Kenneth Adelman	Victor Chu	Timothy Ong
Adnan Abu-Odeh	Mong Joon Chung	Olara Otunnu
HRH Prince Turki al-Faisal	Pat Cox	Lord (Christopher)
Hushang Ansary	Gianfranco Dell'Alba	Patten
Óscar Arias	Jacques Delors	Shimon Peres
Ersin Arıoğlu	Alain Destexhe	Victor Pinchuk
Richard Armitage	Mou-Shih Ding	Surin Pitsuwan
Diego Arria	Uffe Ellemann-Jensen	Cyril Ramaphosa
Zainab Bangura	Gernot Erlor	Fidel V. Ramos
Shlomo Ben-Ami	Marika Fahlén
Christoph Bertram	Stanley Fischer
Alan Blinken	Malcolm Fraser
Lakhdar Brahimi	Carla Hills
Zbigniew Brzezinski	Swanee Hunt
Kim Campbell	James V. Kimsey
Jorge Castañeda	Aleksander
Naresh Chandra	Kwasniewski
	Todung Mulya Lubis
	Allan J. MacEachen
	Graça Machel
	Jessica T. Mathews
	Barbara McDougall	